

Busy Teacher Resources

October 23, 2006

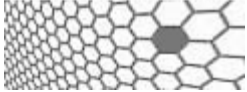

World Museums

MUSÉE's mission, since it was founded in 1992, is to enhance cultural awareness, advance education at all levels, and stimulate public interest in cultural institutions. It is the only Web site that provides access to virtually every museum in the world—organized into over 100 different types of museums (explore our comprehensive list in the margins).

<http://www.musee-online.org/>

OfficialSite.com®

World Museums Official Site

<http://officialsite.com/index.asp?RegionID=1&CategoryID=12>

Smithsonian Photography Initiative

<http://photography.si.edu/>

This website serves several purposes: an online repository of images, a gateway to exhibitions, and a community where visitors can find not only images, but can also connect with others with similar interests, ranging from experts to amateurs. The site also includes Enter the Frame, an interactive interface where visitors can browse images from 19 Smithsonian museums, arrange selected images into sequences, and tag, or apply descriptive keywords to images. Sequences can then be saved, to be viewed by subsequent visitors.

<http://monet.unk.edu/mona/>

Looking for works by John James Audubon, Karl Bodmer, Thomas Hart Benton, or Douglas Martin on the web? Pieces of art from all of these artists can be found at the Museum of Nebraska Art. Fortunately, the museum also has this nice website, and in terms of content, the Artists area (click blue box) contains thematic lists of artists represented in the museum's collection. Clicking on each name will also bring up samples of their work, along with a brief biographical sketch.